MEMBERS

OF THE

Colorado Traffic Club

IN CARICATURE

BY F. FINCH ("Doc Bird")

FINCH & SOWERS
PUBLISHERS
Denver, Colorado
1909

Introduction

ORGANIZED for the purpose of creating cordial social relations between the business men of Denver, the Colorado Traffic Club has grown in three years to be the most powerful and substantial commercial body in this city. Probably in no city in the United States is there a similar organization where the spirit of loyalty to the avowed tenets is so pronounced.

The membership of the Colorado Traffic Club is limited at this time to eight hundred, and there is always a long waiting list of names to take the place of those who, in the natural shifting of events, drop out of the club. On the membership roll of the club are the names of nearly every man high in the commercial, industrial and railroad affairs of Denver and Colorado, and in addition the professions are well represented. In such esteem is this club held that there is a long list of non-resident members who reside in cities in other states.

Denver business men, aside from the natural care for their own commercial interests, strive incessantly for the upbuilding of Colorado and Colorado's capital. The constant drain on their bank accounts for the purpose of promoting municipal and state growth and commercial advantages would discourage men less resolute than they. There are few parallel cases where commercial men of a great city contribute so willingly and liberally to the general hopper of public endeavor, with the full knowledge, born of long experience, that returns must be realized alone in the aggregate of benefits that accrue for the entire community.

In this work of empire building the Colorado Traffic Club takes the lead in Denver. With a clear vision the members look into the future and overcome each obstacle as it is met.

The Colorado Traffic Club was incorporated March 29, 1906. The organization was the culmination of a movement to get the business men and railroad men together in one large organization. Following are the names that appear in the incorporation papers:

Charles F. Freeland, Lester B. Bridaham, Aaron D. Lewis, Ralph R. Gillette, Joshua P. Hall, John F. Vallery, Karl K. Mayer, Charles D. Griffith, George W. Brooks, William P. McPhee, A. D. Parker, William M. Lampton, James C. Ferguson, Lewis F. Kimball, W. C. Metzger.

A. D. Parker was chosen as the first president. The present club rooms, in the Quincy building, Seventeenth and Curtis streets, were fitted up at once, and the new commercial club was launched with a boom that has not waned since the day the doors of the club rooms were swung open to receive the public at a big reception. In the dining room of the club the members meet each day between 12 and 2 o'clock, to talk over big deals, if they wish, or to spend the time together in a social way. Gigantic commercial enterprises are often discussed over cigars in the lounging rooms, and daily cares are laid aside at the pool and billiard tables.

To sum up: The Colorado Traffic Club is a social organization for business men, but under the surface rolls the deep and wide stream of commercial events.

The motto of the club is: "Strive for the Upbuilding of Denver and Colorado."

HOPKIN'S PHOTOGRAPHER

DELINQUENTS

The picture on the preceding page represents the situation when this book was sent to press. The man who is "beating it" to avoid having his "face taken" may be any one of the men whose names appear below. All of them agreed to let the photographer "do his worst," but when the critical moment arrived they had "important business" elsewhere. Sowers was not successful in his efforts to flag them as they ran past him, so Finch has done the best he could under the circumstances. At last account Hopkins was still in the dark room trying to develop his imagination so that he could give Finch a word picture of the features of the delinquents.
